The calendar was the clue to solving this murder. The police realized that since Mr. Whitcombe was wearing his watch on his right arm, he must have been left-handed. Realizing that the number on the calendar was written in a hurry and with his opposite hand, police matched the written number with the months of the year. So the B was an 8, thereby giving us 7-8-9-10-11: July, August, September, October, November. Use the first letter of each month and it spells J-A-S-O-N.

Mystery 4. When Detective Charles was outside, he saw the window, along with shattered pieces of glass under his feet. This meant that the glass was broken from inside. Part 3- ANSWER KEYS

Mystery 1 The George in question is George Washington, specifically the picture of Washington on the quarter. He was, in fact, dead when he was found. As he is on a coin, he would be nearly flat, and cool to the touch. Finally, when you turn the quarter over, on the "back of the head" you will find a perching eagle.

Mystery 4 Since the train was going at 150 km/h, the sound of the gunshot in the front of the train would reach the policeman's ears faster than the gunshot from the back of the train. So the conductor was shot first.

Mystery 5 Lord Victor could not have done it because of his sight. He could not have been accurate at such a distance. Rev Don Whiteshire could not have done it. The shooting happened in mid service. He was in clear view at that time. Carol Magson is the only remaining suspect. She assumed that her Aunt's money would come to her, so she had motive and opportunity.
